The Story

Once upon a time, when Narnia was still young, a/an _____, young eagle named Sharpbeak decided to set out for an adventure. A wise _____ climbed his _____ tree to talk to him before he left. He crawled into the eagle's _____ nest and said, "That was a long climb. I'm thirsty. May I have a cup of _____?"

As the two friends watched the sun set over the _____ mountains, the eagle said _____, "I wonder what's on the other side of those mountains?"

His _____ companion warned him, "Beware of the _____ giants in the north. They like nothing better than to eat us Talking Animals for _____ or even for a snack." Sharpbeak promised he would avoid the giants.

Then his friend said, "Don't forget that there are also _____ dragons living on some of the mountaintops. They don't appreciate _____ visitors. If you surprise them, they may blast you with a _____ burst of their _____ flames. And definitely don't disturb their treasure of _____ and _____."

The eagle said, "I'll be sure to watch out for dragons when I go on my _____ adventure."

"Oh," added Sharpbeak's friend, "I wouldn't advise you to fly over the _____ ocean either. What if you flew as far as you could, and you didn't find a/an _____ island where you could land?" The eagle looked worried. His wise friend added, "If you ever find yourself in dangerous circumstances, remember that you can call on Aslan to protect you. I heard that once he once allowed a timid _____ to walk safely across a stormy lake without sinking."

"My," said Sharpbeak, "that would be a terrible thing." He looked up at the _____ stars, twinkling in the sky. The two friends had spoken long into the night. "I didn't realize it was so late," he said. All I have to offer you to eat is _____ and _____."

"That would be nice," said his friend. He reached into his pocket and said, "and we could have this _____ for dessert. But, after we eat I had better scurry home to my _____, since I can't imagine sleeping in a tree. I mean, if a storm comes up, you have the wind blowing _____ and _____ rain pouring down in torrents. I'm much happier living in a _____ with my _____ . While you go on your journey, I will stay home and _____."

The two friends gave each other a big hug. The eagle's feathers tickled his friend, who said, "May Aslan watch over you during your travels."

The next morning the _____ eagle soared off to begin his adventure. Sharpbeak would be sure to avoid all of the giants, dragons and _____ along the way. But that's a story for another day.
